(C) Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given at the end. 4

Modern industrialists are like men who have come for the first time upon fertile virgin land and can live for a little while in great comfort with only a modicum of labour. It could be irrational to hope that the present hey day of industrialism will not develop for beyond its present level, but soon or later, owing to the exhaustion of raw material, its capacity to supply human need will diminish, not suddenly, but gradually. This could, of course be prevented if men exercised any restraint or foresight in their present frenzied exploitation. Perhaps before it is too late, they will learn to do so. But this is a question of politics, and I do not wish, as yet, to consider the political aspect of our problem.

Questions:

- What is the main idea of the passage?
- How will the present hey day of industrialism fall off?
